The topics of the Dial-A-Law series provide general information on legal issues within the Alberta Province. The purpose of this topic is to inform you of your legal rights and responsibilities. This is not a legal advice. If you need legal advice, you should contact a lawyer. This topic is about Common-law Relationships now called Cohabiting Relationships and Adult Interdependent Relationships. Definition of relationships of coexistence and interdependent relationships for adults "Cohabit Relations" and "Adult Interdependent Relations" are relationships in which two people choose to live together without getting married. These relationships also include same-sex couples. The term "common law" is no longer used in the laws of Alberta; as the law in Alberta changed with the introduction of the term "Adult Interdependent Relationship". In Alberta, the Adult Interdependent Partnership Act defines an Adult Interdependent Partner as: a person who lived with another person in an interdependence relationship. Interdependent adult partnership The law provides two possible ways to exist such a relationship; if a formal and valid agreement for adult interdependent partners is created with the other person. (Note that two people who are connected by blood or adoption must enter this agreement to be considered interdependent partners for adults); or if partners are not connected by blood or adoption, they have or; (a) Live with another person in a "Interdependence Report" for at least three (3) continuous years; or (b) Live with the other person in a "Relation of Interdependence" of a certain stay where there is a child of the relationship (both for birth and for adoption). (Note: there is no requirement that it is necessary to be aware that you are in an interdependent adult relationship (AIR) or that you knew that this legislation existed.) A "Interdependence Report" is a relationship in which two people (1) share the life of one another, (2) are emotionally engaged to each other, and (3) function as an economic and domestic unit (this could mean sharing/invoicing). The new law is established in the law on interdependent relationships for adults and has been applied in Alberta since June 2003. However, the term "common law" is still used in Canadian or federal laws and there may be some differences from the federal law on interdependent relationships for adults (AIRA). For example, according to federal law, to qualify as "common law" for tax purposes, the parties must reside together for only one (1) year. If you live in an interdependent relationship of Cohabiting and Adult, you should know that the relationship never becomes a marriage in the legal sense. No matter how long you live together. Age of partners in relationships of cohabitation and interdependent relationships for adults It is lawful to live in a Cohabiting and AdultReport ("AIR") as long as both partners are at least 18 years old. It is also possible to live in an "AIR" with a person under the age of 18 with the consent of his guardian. An individual who has 16 or 17 years of age can enter an "AIR", as long as their guardian provides the prior written consent. The old law applicable to the reports which ended before 1 January 2020 is that the property belongs to the person who paid it. Any property that a partner purchased belongs exclusively to that person; their partner has no legal rights for the property purchased by their partner simply because they lived together for a period of time. If a partner has contributed to the property, directly or indirectly, they may have rights to the specific property. A direct contribution may include but is not limited to, making mortgage payments, utility payments or restructuring. An indirect contribution may include, but is not limited to, providing child care while their partner has worked, maintaining the family or family decoration. You should consult a lawyer if you believe that you have earned a right to ownership in the unique name of your partner and you had a long-term relationship. The property that is purchased and registered jointly makes you both legal owners. In the case of common property, a partner cannot maintain the property itself and exclude the other from use, possession or sale; Therefore, a partner cannot sell the property have the consent of the other owner. If the property is sold, the proceeds must be shared fairly. In case of separation, a partner may also consider buying the other partner's share in the property. Children If a child is born from an interdependent relationship for adults, the mother is considered the only parent guardian and guardian of the child if the father does not recognize himself as a parent and does not demonstrate the intention to assume the responsibilities of a guardian within one year from each other; (a) become aware of pregnancy or (b) being aware of the birth of the child, which is before. The Order of Support of the Child can be modified if circumstances change, and the Order can be applied throughout Canada. Changing Surnames In Alberta, a partner cannot request a formal change of names to change their surname to that of their interdependent adult partner. A partner may, however, adopt the surname of the interdependent adult partner. Note that this change cannot be done for illegal reasons. If a partner decides to use the surname of his partner, he should have the driver's license and credit cards changed to the new surname. A person may be required to maintain their old name on some other documents, such as a social insurance card. Protection of interests To fully protect the rights of both partners, including same-sex partners, all necessary legal documents must be prepared. These documents include, but are not limited to, a will, a duration of lawyer, personal directives and an agreement of cohabitation. To protect your interests you need to contact a lawyer to see how these documents can help protect you and your partner. death of a partner if a partner dies, he must be specifically appointed in the will of the deceased partner to inherit any of the property. If the partner is not specifically appointed in the will of the deceased partner, a former legal spouse may be able to contest that he will. If it does not exist, an interdependent adult partner has the same rights as a married person to inherit the property. Similarly, a child of an interdependent adult partnership would be treated as a child by a conjugal relationship.
